The 2017 Multnomah County Board of Commissioners is the county's first board to be composed of a majority of people of color and its seventh to be composed of all women. This includes the county's first Asian American commissioner, Lori Stegmann, and the county's third Latina commissioner, Jessica Vega Pederson. This Board of Commissioners is pursuing a range of progressive policies, including the unanimous passage of a resolution declaring that access to safe, affordable, and comprehensive reproductive health services is a right and pursuing a project to identify and implement alternatives to incarceration that strives to keep families together and provide support to the community.
