SPOTLIGHT: Comprehensive Support to Young Parents

The Lindsay School, funded by the San Diego County Office of Education, provides an alternative high school experience for young mothers, operating within a social justice framework and providing students the option to study outside of school. Students may breastfeed between classes, and children can join their mothers in the classroom. The Lindsay School is also committed to providing resources outside the classroom, including a literacy program in the building and a mobile health clinic parked outside. Half of young mothers in San Diego County do not graduate from high school, but nearly all Lindsay School students do complete their graduation requirements, and the majority pursue higher education.
